Posted: January 6, 2017

Nearly three-quarters of francophones believe the future of their language in Canada is threatened. But just one-third of anglophones agree. That's a key finding of a major national survey on perceptions of Canada's two official languages commissioned by the Department of Canadian Heritage. According to the survey report, dated Nov. 3, 80 per cent of Canadians or more believe [\[...more\]](#)
